Ian:

During most of the week, Ryan drinks alcohol after a hard day of work. He usually enjoys special drinks from Columbia bars, but does not want to deal with the added risk of going downtown at night, in fear of crime or drunk drivers.

One night, Ryan sees an alcohol/bar-oriented delivery app, downloads it, and registers.

On his way to work, Ryan thinks about using the app later, which gives him something nice to look forward to after work.

Now on his break, Ryan looks into potentially purchasing from a liquor store before they close, but decides on ordering from a bar in the evening.

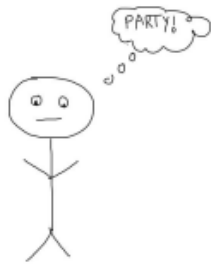

Now home from work and with his wife, Ryan orders some cocktails from a local bar and calls over family. He is satisfied with the app, and rearranges the house as his alcohol gets delivered and the party gets started.

Ryan goes to sleep very drunk while his wife pleads with him to stop drinking, but he is just too happy with how everything worked out with the delivery service to care about something so unimportant!
